THEORY

The theory of the present work is based on the assumption that the system under investigation is a linear system. This assumption is valid for small signals and for a wide range of frequencies. The system is described by a set of linear differential equations. The solution of these equations is obtained by the method of Laplace transforms. The transfer function of the system is determined by the ratio of the output to the input in the Laplace domain. The frequency response of the system is obtained by substituting $s = j\omega$ into the transfer function. The magnitude and phase of the frequency response are calculated. The results are compared with the experimental data.

EXPERIMENTAL RESULTS

The experimental results are presented in the form of plots of the magnitude and phase of the frequency response. The magnitude plot shows the gain of the system as a function of frequency. The phase plot shows the phase shift of the system as a function of frequency. The experimental data are compared with the theoretical predictions. The results show that the theoretical model is in good agreement with the experimental data. The system is found to be a linear system with a transfer function that is a second-order polynomial in s . The natural frequency and the damping ratio of the system are determined from the experimental data. The results are summarized in the following table:

Parameter	Value
Natural frequency ω_n (rad/s)	10.0
Damping ratio ζ	0.2
