THE EFFECT OF THE
PHYSICIAN'S ATTITUDE
ON THE PATIENT'S REACTION

JOHN H. BROWN, M.D.
CHICAGO, ILL.

It is a well-known fact that the physician's attitude toward his patient has a profound effect on the patient's reaction to treatment. This is true in all branches of medicine, but it is particularly true in the treatment of the nervous system.

It is the purpose of this paper to discuss the effect of the physician's attitude on the patient's reaction to treatment, and to suggest some methods of improving the physician's attitude.

The first method of improving the physician's attitude is to have a thorough knowledge of the patient's history and physical condition.

The second method is to have a sympathetic attitude toward the patient. The physician should be able to understand the patient's point of view and to sympathize with his feelings.

The third method is to have a confident attitude toward the patient. The physician should be able to inspire confidence in the patient and to make him feel that he is in good hands.

The fourth method is to have a cheerful attitude toward the patient. The physician should be able to make the patient feel that he is being treated by a cheerful and optimistic person.
